

Data on landowners and homeowners 19th century

Originally, the area of Friedrichstadt was divided into two quarters, as the map of 1833 shows:

The properties in Friedrichstadt were registered under unique numbers. Gradually, some of them were divided into two or more, so the plots were numbered with additional letters. Until the beginning of the 20th century there was no numbering along the streets.

The areas located south of the core city were called outer districts (Weichbild in newspaper publications). They are denoted by W in the following "Quarter" column. There was a separate numbering system for them. Later, these parts of the city were called quarters III and IV.

Another category of land was called "Rigenstelle" in the documents of that time, which probably referred to land intended for the initial processing of the harvest, such as drying and storage.

Most of the data below are taken from the official newspaper of the Courland government of the Russian Empire (Курляндские губернские ведомости = Kurländische Gouvernements Zeitung), hereafter abbreviated KGZ.
